

WARNING

This area is subject to risk of damage or injury from falling trees or limbs.

RECREATING IN THIS AREA IS AT YOUR OWN RISK

Laminated Root Rot has been identified in trees in Grandview Forest Park.

Laminated Root Rot is a native fungus in northwestern forests and primarily infects Douglas-fir trees. It may live for decades in old stumps and spreads from tree to tree via root contact. In urban and residential areas it is especially dangerous as many trees lose more than 50% of their structural root systems before the tree either dies or is blown over.

"THE MARITIME CITY"